

What are you talking about?

How brands can spot emerging trends online

to create content and media stories

...and jump on the best bandwagons

Two ways that trends are good.

For media stories

Trends are change.
Something is changing...
It's going up,
It's going down,
It's going up and down.

And change is interesting.
Change is news.
Trends are good for stories.

For content

Trends are also movements.
Things to join in with.
To belong to.
Or to be different from.
To compare and contrast with.

And belonging is a human need.
Belonging is attractive.
Trends are good for attraction.

In PR and content, trends are double-good

They're traffic magnets for audiences, and catnip for journalists and publishers

As Tech Booms, Workers Turn to Coding for Career Change

1 Headline: One change leads to another... Correlation (and implied causation)

2 The anecdotal change...

People across a spectrum of jobs — poker players, bookkeepers, baristas — are shedding their past for a future in the booming tech industry.

3 ...gets quantified as a rate of change...

The graduating classes of these coding schools support the trend. They will graduate about 16,000 students this year, more than double the 6,740 graduates last year, according to a survey published by Course Report in June.

4 ...plus change gets personal

After a three-month course in computer programming and data analysis, Paul Minton, a former math major, moved up from waiting tables to a job as a data scientist, earning more than $100,000 a year.

5 ...and static data points for proofs

Nationally, the average base salary for software engineers is $100,000, and $112,000 for data scientists.

Glassdoor lists more than 7,300 openings for software engineers, ahead of job openings for nurses, who are chronically in short supply.

The total would be about one-third of the estimated number of computer science graduates from American universities.
